Suddenly the baby swallowed the pin!

Ten-month-old Larry pulled a large open safety pin from his busy mother's sewing table and swallowed it.

Frantically, his mother grabbed the telephone, dialed "Operator" and gasped out the name of her family doctor.

Mrs. Virginia Klow, the operator who answered, thought fast and asked the agitated mother whether she wanted an ambulance first. "Oh, Yes!" she cried.

Even while Mrs. Klow was calling the ambulance, she got the mother's name, her address and telephone number. And only seconds after the ambulance started on its way, the distracted woman was connected with her physician.

Later at the hospital, the pin was safely removed. Larry has long since forgotten the episode. His grateful mother never will.

as we see it

■ In the unlikely event anyone ever asks you to appear in a beer commercial, there are five rules you should remember.

First, don't drink it.

Second, don't tip the glass as if you were heading for your mouth.

Third, don't wiggle your Adam's apple as if you were swallowing it.

Fourth, don't smack your lips as if you were savoring it.

Fifth, don't wipe your lips as if you had finished it.

■ If you violate any of these rules, the Television Code Authority warned in a recent bulletin, the commercial will be banned and you'll never get all that money you were counting on. The Authority insists that people who deliver beer commercials refrain from indicating, intimating, suggesting, insinuating or even hinting that they drink the stuff. At least on camera.

■ There's a reason for this. In the early days of television, when time cost little and nearly every beer manufacturer could afford to advertise on the new medium, the Nation's tubes were awash with suds spots. Wherever you flipped your dial, you would find an announcer guzzling his favorite brew.

This was before the advent of the deodorant dramas and the pain pitches. People weren't powdering babies' bottoms or shaving legs on camera. They weren't even conducting nasograph tests. This was way back before television matured.

■ So what few viewers there were in the olden days took offense at all the beer drinking, and the beer people cooled it. Nary a sip of beer has passed an announcer's lips on a TV Code-member station since 1956.

The last Adam's apple wiggled in 1961 and the last lip smack, we hear, was on July 6, 1963, at 7:21 P.M.

SMUT IN THE LIVING ROOM?

Hollywood's salacious films may be peddled to television

First of three parts BY LESLIE RADDATZ

After seeing Billy Wilder's "Kiss Me, Stupid"—a movie which that paragon of contemporary taste, Playboy, compared to "amateur night at a third-rate burlesque house"—I said to myself, "Well, there's one picture that will never be on TV."

But then I began to wonder.

Television is turning more and more to motion pictures to fill its gaping maw. In addition to the hundreds of individual TV stations which have traditionally used movies as a staple, the networks are now in hot competition for the latest releases. NBC has been running two features a week, ABC one, and CBS plans to start showing feature films next season.

Where will they all come from? Almost certainly from the newer crop of Hollywood movies, which are characterized by "an unmistakable surge of sensuality and just plain smut," according to Bosley Crowther of the New York Times.

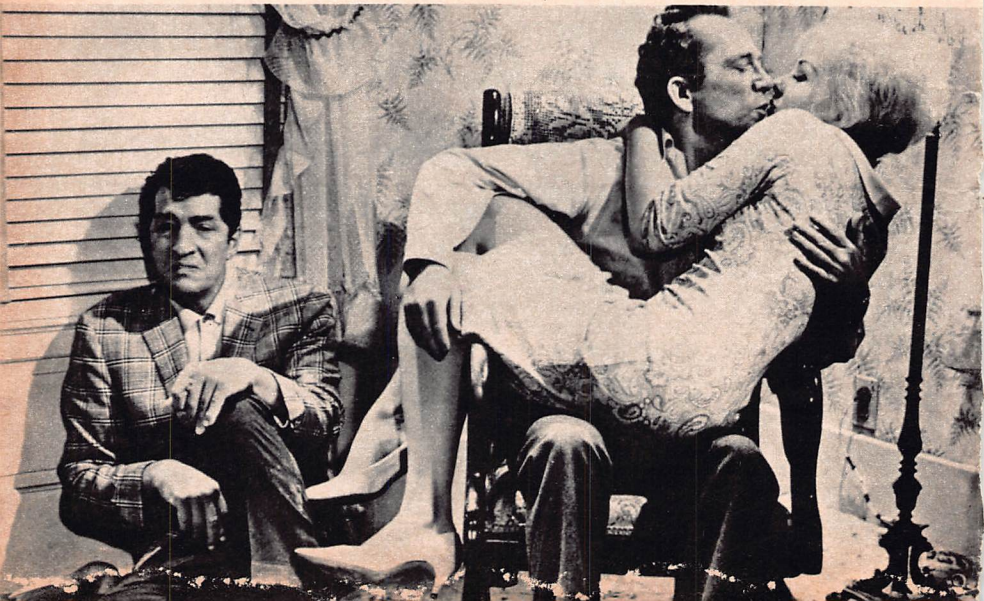

Is it fanciful, then, to suppose that we may soon be seeing on TV not only "Kiss Me, Stupid," but such other current and recent Hollywood epics as "The Carpetbaggers" ("An untalented leering paean to sex"—Life); "A House Is Not a Home" ("A trashy movie"—New Yorker); or "Walk on the Wild Side" ("The latest nightmare out of Hollywood"—Newsweek)?

The current crop of Hollywood movies has caused consternation and brought threats of censorship from Coast to Coast. In New York, Bosley Crowther writes: "Once more, the heat is on the movies. Because of the increasing flow of films of a cheap and sordid nature that has been running for the past year or so, the people who make it their business to guard against such things have raised a cry—a more angry and anguished one than usual." And in Hollywood, columnist Sidney Skolsky writes: "I'm no prude. . . . I put censorship down. But with a few more movies like 'The Carpetbaggers' and 'A House Is Not a Home,' censorship is going to make a strong, strict comeback."

Only a few years ago, Hollywood was being threatened with censorship because of the violence of many of its films. These pictures are now turning up on television. Here are a few which have been shown recently—some well-done, others not—along with contemporary critical comments: "The Young Savages": "A spectator comes away with a bad taste in his mouth but no new dramatic potion to wash it out."—Variety. "The Naked Spur": "Probably too raw and brutal for some theatergoers."—Variety. "The Vikings": "Gore is the keynote of 'The Vikings.'"—Los Angeles Examiner. "The Last Days of Pompeii": "Gore galore."—Daily Variety.

Hollywood has not entirely abandoned violence for sex. But since films like these, which were so controversial only a few years ago, are now on the air, this reporter decided to see what the television prospects were for the newer pictures.

First stop: the office of the Motion Picture Association of America in Hollywood and Geoffrey Shurlock, administrator of the MPAA Production Code. He is a short, round, gentle man of 70, who has spent almost half his life trying to persuade the motion picture producers—the men who pay his salary—to do what he wants them to do; namely, follow the spirit as well as the letter of the Production Code.

Code office didn't get script

Concerning motion pictures which might embarrass a man and his family when seen on television in the family living room, Geoffrey Shurlock says only, "Television is capable of running its own business. But shouldn't the public be the final judge of what it sees in a democratic country?" Concerning "Kiss Me, Stupid," which received the MPAA Seal despite flagrant Code violations, Shurlock admits that Billy Wilder did not show a script to the Code office but presented a finished production on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Now Shurlock shrugs his shoulders and says, "We're entitled to one mistake."

Billy Wilder refuses to discuss "Kiss Me, Stupid." He is one of Hollywood's most honored directors—a retrospective exhibit of his films was held this winter by the Museum of Modern Art in New York, and he and his pictures have won many Oscars—but both his career and his work have often verged on an, at best, unconventional and sometimes seamy borderline. As long ago as 1944 he was being described as a "No. 1 specialist at doing the can't-be-done." Attention has been called to "the inner nihilism, the impatience and contempt for the audience" of Wilder, and it has been said that "he seems almost to be playing a game with himself to see how close he can come to the edge of questionable taste. . . ." A former associate has said, "He is the only guy I know who could sneer 'Merry Christmas.' "

Rise of a onetime gigolo

Born in Vienna in 1906, Wilder moved to Berlin as a young man. There, he says, "I danced as a gigolo in the Eden Hotel, and at the Adlon I served as a teatime partner for little old ladies." He sold his first movie script when his landlady's daughter, whose fiancé arrived unexpectedly, hid another man in his room. Wilder recognized the man as head of a film company and would not let him out until he had agreed to read his script. When he came to Hollywood in 1934, Wilder lived for a time in an unused ladies' lavatory at the Chateau Marmont hotel. He broke into movies as a writer before eventually becoming producer, director and writer of his own films.

Wilder's professional and accompanying social rise is a commentary on the movie milieu. To best describe the social structuring of Hollywood, Billy Wilder has gone from furtive living in the lavatory of the Chateau Marmont to social leadership—presumably a psychiatrist would attribute continued

His major pictures have received wide critical acclaim, but they usually deal with distasteful or single-entendre themes. "Double Indemnity" concerned a cheating wife who conspired with her lover, a crooked insurance man, to murder her husband. "Sunset Boulevard" was the story of a gigolo screenwriter who lived with an aging movie star. "The Lost Weekend" was about an alcoholic. In "Some Like It Hot," Jack Lemmon and Tony Curtis wore women's clothes. "The Apartment" was described by Wilder as being "about a young fellow who gets ahead in a big company by lending his apartment to executives for that grand old American folk ritual, the afternoon shack-up." And "Irma la Douce" concerned a Parisian prostitute and her mec. Wilder's latest, "Kiss Me, Stupid," has to do with a double adultery, with, according to Life, "situations and a dialog that would generate blushes in a smoker car."

Concerning censorship, Wilder has said, "I have always felt that the industry as a whole is chicken. I am very much pro the Shurlock office, but I am very much opposed to some ladies' club in Nebraska cutting the gizzards out of a film." Concerning television, he says, "I am delighted with that medium, I must say, because it used to be that we in films were in the eyes of the snobs the lowest art form. Now we have something to look down on."

Behind Wilder are the Mirisch brothers—Harold, Walter and Marvin—leaders among the new generation of movie entrepreneurs, described as "former popcorn concessionaires . . . who are delighted to let Wilder have his own way about everything."

Another of the new generation of Hollywood producers is porcine, 59-year-old Joseph E. Levine, who started out exploiting cheap imports like "Godzilla" and "Hercules" and went on to such award-winning films as "Two Women" and "Divorce—Italian Style," and, more recently, "The Carpetbaggers," which will win no awards but will make millions at the box office—and may or may not find its way to television. A Hollywood observer says, "Joe Levine pictures have just one thing in common—they all make money."

Some of the Levine pictures are already on television, notably "Two Women," which involves the rape of a woman and her teen-age daughter, and "The Sky Above—The Mud Below," an award-winning documentary about Dutch New Guinea which Levine characteristically exploited in sensational fashion with emphasis on naked natives. On KHJ-TV in Los Angeles, for example, these are being shown as part of a weekly series of foreign films called Cinema IX on Fridays and Saturdays at 10 P.M. Other pictures in the series are: "Room at the Top," which concerns adultery; "A Taste of Honey," which deals with illegitimacy and homosexuality; and "The Mark," which is about a suspected child molester.

Films in the Cinema IX series are presented in dignified fashion, with none of the Levine trimmings. In discussing the program, which went on the air in September, station manager Malcolm C. Klein says, "We saw that the network schedules for 1964 were just pap—escapist entertainment. Critics said it was the worst season ever. We had all these great pictures, which had received many awards. We felt that they should not be kept from TV because they dealt with sordid or seamy subjects."

According to Klein, reaction to the series has been 80 percent favorable. Some parents objected that they were out and teen-agers were baby-sitting at 10 o'clock Friday and Saturday nights. Otherwise, mail response ranged all the way from an indignant, "Garbage is a factor of life, but we don't want it in our living room," to this letter from a Roman Catholic nun who teaches at a Los Angeles college: "We welcome the program of films in Cinema IX. . . . We are attempting to provide an opportunity for our students to participate in screenings and discussions of serious films that merit attention and appreciation. . . . We are convinced that personal responsibility and parental responsibility should be exercised in film selection. That is why we believe there is a place for adult films on television. Thank you for presenting them for us."

Perhaps, then, this was the solution to a dilemma presented by a veteran Hollywood journalist who said, "The great thing is that television has taken over the place of program pictures and B pictures, so that good adult movies can be made. If these adult films can't be shown on television, does it mean that all motion pictures are to be made at the level of the TV viewer?" Was the solution to present worthwhile adult films in dignified fashion, as was being done by Cinema IX, and leave public outcry to doom such pictures as "Kiss Me, Stupid"?

Or, if the trend toward smut on the screen continued, would some sort of censorship (which is as distasteful to most Americans as smutty films) be demanded if and when the current pictures turned up on television? How effective is the self-regulation of the National Association of Broadcasters' Television Code? Is Government—either through Congressional committees or the Federal Communications Commission—preparing to move into this sensitive area?

Next week: Senators, congressmen, the Federal Communications Commission and the chief of the National Association of Broadcasters' Television Code Authority answer some of these questions.

THEY PLAY A HEADS-UP GAME

Two young entrepreneurs keep a beauty shop swinging seven days a week

If ever a place was ripe for "The Hairhunters," it was Hollywood. "The Hairhunters" is a beauty shop where hi-fi music blasts out the live-long day, where there's a TV room with a color set and balcony and loge seats. The set and the hi-fi are turned up full so that the sound can be heard over the hot air rushing around in the driers.

There is a bulletin board listing news and assignments of patrons, most of whom are in show business; a flamboyant décor featuring wild animals—stuffed of course—peeping from behind palm trees; and hairdressers who can sing, dance or tell a funny story at the drop of a comb.

Relaxing? Well, for some inexplicable reason it is, at least to show people. Says actress Madlyn Rhue: "I come here to study my scripts. You see, I can do that here without being self-conscious."

The brain power behind "The Hairhunters" belongs to Raun Niles, 28, and Carol Paul, 25, both of whom operated beauty shops in Chicago. Raun's shop was much like this one. A native of California, he took California to Chicago—"those hot colors and casual ways," he says, "and they loved it." His Chicago staff wore Bermuda shorts, his hi-fi music was piped inside and outside, and there were no curtains in the windows "so everyone could see the action."

To get their Hollywood shop off the ground, Carol and Raun plastered the town with posters announcing, "Hairhunters Coming." When they were ready they changed the signs to read, "They're Here," and gave the address of their beauty shop. For $250 they hired 10 aspiring actresses from the Hollywood Studio Club, did their hair to a turn, and paraded them around the town's night spots and restaurants. On opening night they splashed the sky with lights, and served champagne and hors d'oeuvres. Five-hundred people showed up. And they keep coming back. These days the shop is open seven days a week to take care of all the business.

Catching up with

Bill Raisch, who plays the One-Armed Man on The Fugitive, here seems to be contemplating the bleak fate that awaits should Dr. Richard Kimball (David Jansen) ever catch up with him.

The One-Armed Man of ABC's The Fugitive actually is a one-armed man.

He is a burly ex-Ziegfeld adagio dancer named Bill Raisch, who usually wears an artificial right arm to replace the one that was amputated after he was severely burned fighting a shipboard fire during World War II.

As the apparent killer of David Janssen's TV wife, he is a key figure in The Fugitive's plot. He has been appearing at the beginning of every episode. He receives fan mail ("mostly from kids"). And recently, on location for a movie in Gallup, N.M., he was besieged for autographs.

But being the One-Armed Man is not a full-time job—or a living—for a one-armed actor. In the two years that The Fugitive has been in production, Bill Raisch has worked on the program only four days.

He makes his living as stand-in for Burt Lancaster and playing occasional one-armed roles in motion pictures. In "Spartacus," Kirk Douglas chopped Raisch's arm off—an artificial arm attached to what is left of the original—but the scene was cut out of the picture because it was too gory.

He also engaged in a knock-down-drag-out saloon fight, again with Douglas, in "Lonely Are the Brave," an offbeat Western. "Kirk didn't use a double for the fight," says Raisch. "Once he started turning blue when I was choking him with my empty sleeve, but I didn't dare let go until the director hollered, 'Cut.'" Fortunately for Douglas, the director called "cut" in time, and Raisch loosened the empty sleeve which he

'the one-armed man'

Raisch is pleased that "Lonely Are the Brave" gave him a chance to show that a one-armed man can be tough. He points out, "Usually in pictures, amputees are used as news-boys or down-and-outers."

Raisch was a tough customer before he was ever an amputee. During his dancing days in the late 20's, five hoodlums jumped him one night on a New York street. Although he took a beating, the five didn't come off well either, and the next day a newspaper ran his picture with the headline, "Don't Say Dancers Are Sissies."

His progress from North Bergen, N.J., where he was born of German immigrant parents on April 5, 1905, to dancing for Florenz Ziegfeld is probably unique. After getting out of grade school, he went into the building trades, hauling cement. In his spare time, he frequented Sig Klein's gym in New York, where, he says, "I became the star pupil."

Eventually Raisch was brought to the attention of a society girl who was looking for a dancing partner. He danced with her at parties around New York and was seen by Follies star Marilyn Miller, who introduced him to Ziegfeld. By 1929, he was dancing in "Whoopie," starring Eddie Cantor, and for Ziegfeld at the New Amsterdam Roof, where Maurice Chevalier was making his first American appearance.

"Boy, that was show business in those days!" he says.

In addition to meeting famous theatrical personalities, he also got to know such Broadway luminaries as Walter Winchell, Mark Hellinger and Ben Hecht. It was Hecht who, years later, brought him to Hollywood after a succession of operations on his injured arm. When the arm was finally amputated, Hecht told him he'd write a part for a one-armed man in his next picture. Hecht wrote the part, in "Spectre of the Rose," and Raisch played it, but with his artificial arm.

Thirteen years ago he became Burt Lancaster's stand-in. Today, at 60, he lives in a modest apartment in Hollywood with his wife, Adele Smith, a former Ziegfeld girl, whom he married in 1951. He is philosophical about the past, the present and the future.

Of the old days on Broadway, he says, "One month, you'd walk up the street with 15¢ in your pocket to eat at the Automat. Six months later, you'd walk down the other side of the street with your pocket full of money, but you didn't feel hungry."

Concerning the present, he says, "Amputation's not so bad," and he speaks lightly of his "wing." Of the future, he says, "Maybe if I was younger, this would bother me, but now it doesn't."

As for the future of the One-Armed Man, Quinn Martin, executive producer of The Fugitive, says, "We believe that if we keep him evanescent, it's much more interesting—until the last show, maybe five years from now, when Kimble finally catches him." Meanwhile, Raisch can go on answering fan mail, signing autographs and getting an occasional day's work.

Why golf may find itself deep in the rough

CARY MIDDLECOFF WARNS ABOUT OVEREXPOSURE ON TV,
AS HE PREPARES TO BROADCAST THE MASTERS

By Melvin Durslag

During his prime as a professional golfer, Cary Middlecoff stood on the 18th green one day, putting for the money. The click of a camera interrupted him. Cary turned away.

"Look," he said tartly to his distractor, "this is the way I make my living."

The cameraman replied, "And this is the way I make mine."

Middlecoff studied him coldly. "Okay," he said, proffering his putter, "then supposing you play this shot."

In Cary's new position as a television golf commentator, we have daydreamed of a young pro, upset by the muffled voice of a TV announcer, stepping away from his shot and saying, "Look, fella, this is the way I make my living."

Whereupon Middlecoff answers, "Shaddup and hit the ball already."

There is, of course, no assurance he would respond in exactly that way. He might merely dismiss the pro as a troublemaking fink and continue with his commentary. It's the unknown quantity that made Cary an interesting personality as a golfer and could make him an exciting performer one day on TV.

No diplomat in the State Department tradition, Middlecoff, at the peak of his game, was more than a little outspoken, and even today he is no model of restraint. For instance, he leaves you with such arresting thoughts as the following:

- Too much exposure on TV could dry up golf's golden gusher, as it dried up boxing's.

- A victory in such classics as the U.S. Open, the PGA, or the Masters is often overrated, and, often, works to the detriment of the winner.

- The Professional Golfers' Association, as a ruling body, is all right, but nothing special.

Approached by CBS last year to do commentary on the Masters, in which he was entered, Middlecoff refused because he wanted nothing to conflict with his concentration on golf.

This in itself is the least bit unconventional in an age in which football and baseball people have TV and radio shows emanating from the locker room and in which golfers Arnold Palmer and Gary Player performed in a whole series in which they did commentary on the side.

To Middlecoff, however, a distressing thing happened in the Masters last year. He didn't survive the cut.

Frank Chirkinian, directing the CBS telecast of the event, then came to Middlecoff again, asking if he wanted to work the 18th hole with Chris Schenkel on the last two days. Thus, Cary bloomed as a golf announcer who was later to sign a contract to do the CBS Golf Classic, a taped series shown this past winter and spring. The network also grabbed him for this year's Masters, which will be carried live this weekend, April 10 and 11, and he has deals for other golf events during the year.

Now 44 and troubled by a back injury which has upset his swing, Middlecoff has made such strides as a fairways talker that he will serve at the Masters as anchor commentator, a spot usually reserved for announcers of more experience.

Largely because of television, purses in professional golf this year are higher than ever. In 43 PGA-sanctioned tournaments in 1965, the pros will cut up some $3.5 million. Many will add measurably to their income with fees from filmed series.

Still, the over-all picture has Middlecoff less than ecstatic. "The money is rolling in now," he says, "but we could be heading toward over-exposure. I wonder what's going to happen if people start watching tournaments, say, 30 times a year on TV."

"They watch baseball and football," we interjected.

"But they see different teams," he said. "Remember, in live golf you see about the same faces each time."

"Then what would be the proper dosage?"

"I'd say 15 national exposures a year would be plenty. Otherwise, the public will lose interest."

Obviously unworried about the future are TV sponsors, who will spend $11 million this year to put golf on the air. It is hoped that they are enjoying the shows, because the ratings hint that others are able to live superbly without them.

It is generally accepted that a win in one of the so-called classics means instant success and noticeable financial gain for the victor, a notion which Middlecoff dispels.

"A win in a major event," says Cary, "does only one thing for a golfer who isn't already well established. It puts him in a position to be noticed. If he can continue winning with the attention now focused on him, he's home free. But if he doesn't, he passes into obscurity fast."

"Arnold Palmer has said a win in one of the classics is worth a quarter-of-a-million," we remarked.

"Maybe to him," replied Cary. "But to a run-of-the-mill golfer, I would say the win, in fringe benefits, would be more like $20,000."

Is Middlecoff satisfied with the way the PGA is administering the game these days? He answered frankly:

"It's not the greatest organization. It makes a lot of blunders. But it's not the worst organization either. Its main problem is trying to keep tournament and TV sponsors happy by producing the stars for their events. This isn't easy, because the PGA can't tell them when to play.

"The PGA has two rules to protect their sponsors. It won't allow a member to play in a tournament conflicting with a PGA event, and there's an unwritten understanding that its stars—its top money winners—won't skip any tournament three straight years. Not the best way of assuring the sponsors top merchandise, but that's about all the PGA can do."

If Middlecoff were to pinpoint any single reason for the golf boom in the last 10 years, he would say that it could be ascribed to former President Eisenhower's fondness for the game.

"While he was in office," says Cary, "he played golf, he watched golf and he talked golf. He made people conscious of the sport."

Middlecoff's views on Mr. Eisenhower and golf were expressed several years ago by promoter Jack Kramer, who, watching business deteriorate in his pro tennis tour, observed, "Just my luck I couldn't catch a President who played tennis."

A short time later, Kramer met the problem. He bought a golf course.

For the People

This show may not be, despite its title, for everybody, but the people who gave you The Defenders (and The Doctors and the Nurses) are always worthy of a hearing. And, if executive producer Herbert Brodtkin and producer Arthur Joel Katz are not going to get your unanimous verdict, they deserve at least your majority one. For the fact is just when The Defenders was, let's face it, getting on, they have come up with something which is equally exciting and, because of really fine casting throughout, even more penetrating and engrossing.

Realism is, of course, the long suit here. And though there are times when there can be too much of a good thing—we are thinking of courtroom and street sounds (they're sometimes so real we can't hear anything else)—nonetheless, in contrast with the seemingly endless seaminess of The Doctors and the Nurses, the producers here have come up with stories which may discourage you but which don't so overwhelm you with despair that you give up.

But it's still for adults only—which, for television these days, is at least worth a jury trial. Take, for example, the first episode, aired last Jan. 31. Here Assistant D.A. David Koster (William Shatner) is given a dressing-down by a judge for trying to make of millionaire racketeer Johnny Pack (Patrick McVey) "a vagrant without visible means of support" and, from that moment on, he becomes so obsessed with Pack that we know someday Koster will have to pay for his obsession. Not only does the prosecutor run into trouble when he starts making deals with criminals (he trades them lighter charges for links in the chain up to Johnny) but in the end even his wife (Jessica Walter) all but gives up. ("You're in love with him," she accuses.) When Pack finally has a heart attack, it is, realistically speaking, the only satisfying end; but, to many viewers, it probably seemed mighty unsatisfying.

In this episode Clarice Blackburn and Gerald O'Loughlin were particularly fine, and in more recent episodes so were Paul Hartman, Ruth White, Jaime Sanchez, Philip Bosco, Diana Douglas—really it is impossible to name all the fine actors on these shows. As for Shatner himself, he is right up there in the big leagues with David Janssen, Robert Lansing, Vic Morrow and Richard Crenna. Howard Da Silva is at his best politicianizing Dave ("You're a prosecutor. Don't try to be the judge and jury as well"). As for Jessica Walter, well, it isn't her fault all those kissing scenes seem the same. It's just that dog-gone realism again. Altogether, if CBS brass lets this one go, after only half a season's chance, we hope you'll cite them for contempt.

FOR THE RECORD

Northern California Edition

Lawsuit: Three of the new series introduced by CBS this past fall—The Cara Williams Show, The Baileys of Balboa and The Reporter—were produced by Richelieu Productions, Inc. Richelieu's top man is Keefe Brasselle, a performer turned producer. Brasselle is a long-time friend of James T. Aubrey Jr., whose resignation as president of CBS-TV was announced Feb. 28. None of the above facts are disputed, but a CBS stockholder believes there's more to them than meets the CBS eye. Stockholder A. Edward Morrison, a manufacturer from New Rochelle, N.Y., has filed suit against Aubrey, Richelieu and CBS, charging that Aubrey had a financial interest in Richelieu, that Richelieu profited more from its dealings with CBS than did other production companies and that "present directors" of CBS knew about the alleged "wrongful acts and misconduct" (this last charge was immediately denied by CBS). Aubrey and Brasselle have not commented.

CBS's Fall Lineup: Next fall, CBS's nighttime shows will probably line up like this, though there could be a few changes before September:

SATURDAY: 7:30 (ET), Jackie Gleason; 8:30, O'Brien (courtroom drama, with Peter Falk); 9:30, The Loner (Western, with Lloyd Bridges); 10, Gunsmoke.

SUNDAY: 7, Lassie; 7:30, My Favorite Martian; 8, Ed Sullivan; 9, Perry

Mason; 10, Candid Camera; 10:30, What's My Line?.

MONDAY: 7:30, To Tell the Truth; 8, I've Got a Secret; 8:30, The Lucy Show; 9, Andy Griffith; 9:30, Hazel; 10, Steve Lawrence Show (variety).

TUESDAY: 7:30, Rawhide; 8:30, Red Skelton; 9:30, Petticoat Junction; 10, CBS Reports.

WEDNESDAY: 7:30, Lost in Space (science fiction, with June Lockhart); 8:30, The Beverly Hillbillies; 9, Country Cousins (rural comedy); 9:30, Dick Van Dyke; 10, Danny Kaye.

THURSDAY: 7:30, The Munsters; 8, Gilligan's Island; 8:30, My Three Sons; 9, Movies.

FRIDAY: 7:30, The Wild West (Western, with Robert Conrad) 8:30, Hogan's Heroes (POW comedy, with Bob Crane); 9, Gomer Pyle; 9:30, The Smothers Brothers (comedy-fantasy); 10, Slattery's People.

Victim: For the People is not long for this world. In fact, it will not get even the "half a season's chance" which Cleveland Amory implies is inadequate in his admiring review on page 14. On May 9, after just three months on the air, For the People will breathe its last, joining a long line of CBS contenders which were unable to hold their own against NBC's rating champion, Bonanza. Reruns of Twilight Zone will fill the breach till September—at considerably less expense to CBS than the cost of filming more For the People episodes. The network has nominated Perry Mason to take on Bonanza next fall, switching from its present Thursday berth to the Sunday suicide slot.

A PRIZE — AND A SURPRISE

Re "We're Missing a Bet in Monte Carlo" [TV GUIDE, March 20]: In 1962, The Shari Lewis Show, written by my co-writer Lan O'Kun and myself as a children's show, won an award in the Monte Carlo Festival—as the best variety show. Does this prove Mr. Amory is right? We were wrong? Prince Rainier is confused? NBC was lucky? What?

Saul Turteltaub
Englewood, N.J.

[Mr. Amory did not mean to reflect on winners of prizes in the Monaco competition, he merely deplored the casual attitude many American producers have toward the TV festival.—Ed.]

HERE'S THE HITCH, MITCH

Mitch Miller says the cost killed his show ["Why Mitch Is Moanin' Mighty Low," March 20]. Please ask him what caused the cost. In my opinion, it was fine to start with, and then somebody started dragging in a lot of stuff that turned it into a replica of all the other "variety" shows. One trouble with television is that every show has to be "improved" so it will be like every other show.

EFRON'S EFFORTS

As a television and screen writer (Today, Biography, Hollywood and the Stars, "World Without Sun," etc.), I would like to say that your Edith Efron is the most incisive and exciting television journalist in the country. In her article on Lawrence Spivak ["Stalking the Hunter," March 27] she demonstrates once again a sharp point of view and the courage to express it. Generally, one reads magazine articles if the subject is important or provocative. I read Miss Efron because she is.

Hollywood

Grow up, Edith Efron ["The Soaps—Anything but 99 44/10 Percent Pure," March 13]. Soap operas are a diversion for us housewives, not a pattern for our lives. We can still tell the good guys from the bad guys without a program.

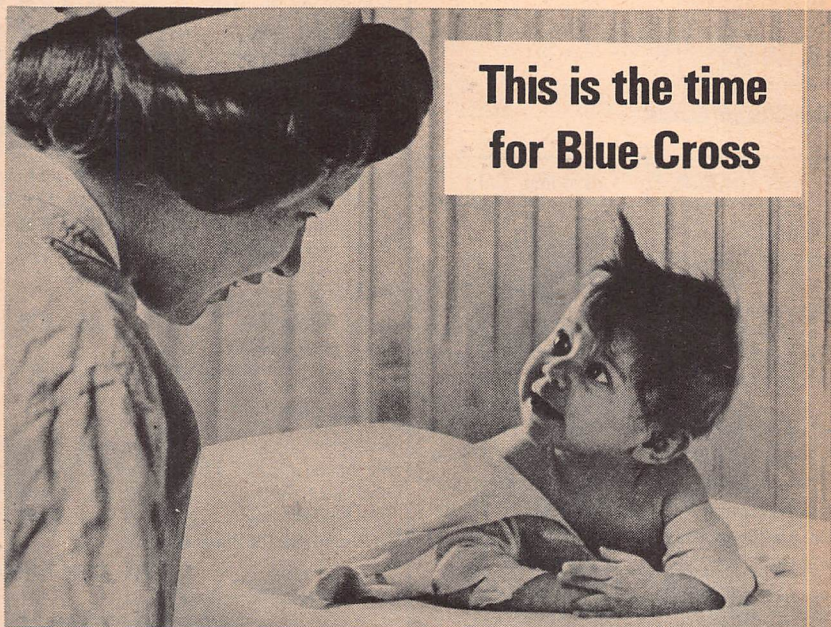

Mrs. Joseph C. Donati
Santa Barbara, Cal.

OPEN SEASON ON AMORY

Cleveland Amory told TV GUIDE readers in one of his first columns that he would try to answer three questions in reviewing a show: "What is this guy trying to do?", "Does he do it?", "Was it worth doing?" In The American Sportsman review [TV GUIDE, March 27], he has let us know his feelings on the third question, but has suspended judgment on the others. If the price of prejudice is two-thirds of his critical standards, it is far too great a price to pay.

This is the time for Blue Cross

With Blue Cross your family gets the best of medical care—without the worry of a large bill hanging over your head. Here are some of the reasons 63 million people prefer Blue Cross:

- When your doctor sends you to the hospital, you merely present your Blue Cross card—there is no red tape. Blue Cross service is confidential.
- Blue Cross pays for most hospital services in full, does not limit you to a “cash allowance” as do ordinary insurance plans.
- When you travel outside of California, benefits are available anywhere in the world.

Blue Cross offers both hospital and doctor care benefits on a group or individual basis.

'MISSION TO MALAYA'

SPECIAL On the island of Langkawi off the coast of Malaya, 22-year-old Peace Corps volunteer Rita Franzone is about to finish a two-year assignment as nurse to the isle's 20,000 inhabitants. At the Peace Corps training center in Dekalb, Ill., nurse Marjorie Benning is finishing up the final days of training prior to being given her assignment: replacing Rita Franzone on the jungle island. Using the cinema verité technique, producer Hope Ryden documents the experiences of the two women.

Cameras focus on Rita making her last rounds to treat such diseases as cholera, malaria, yaws and leprosy; and talking about the Peace Corps and her plans for the future.

On her first day on duty, Marjorie is called on to handle a life-or-death situation: A pregnant woman needs emergency surgery available only on the mainland. Using a borrowed fishing boat and traveling in total darkness to avoid detection by Indonesian pirate ships, Marjorie makes the nightmarish six-hour crossing during a violent storm. Bob Young is the narrator. (60 min.)

'THE FINAL INGREDIENT'

SPECIAL In observance of the Jewish festival of Passover (commemorating the liberation of the Hebrews from Egyptian slavery), which begins Friday, "Directions '65" expands to an hour to present a specially commissioned opera by David Amram and Arnold Weinstein.

The scene is a Nazi concentration camp in 1944, on the day preceding the first Seder. The inmates of the camp are preparing for their Passover celebration—despite the brutality and degradation surrounding them.

Robert DeLaney directed. Adapted from a TV play by Reginald Rose. Composer David Amram conducts.

The only trouble with most shoes is that people insist on walking in them.

Walking brings out the worst in shoes. Not just new shoes, but "broken-in" shoes, too.

How, and why, has been the subject of a continuing, 35-year research program by a leading eastern university. Here's what they found frequently happens to the majority of persons studied.

Heels rub sideways.

Toes bunch together.

One spot in each shoe seems to bear all the weight, instead of proportionate distribution over the ball of the foot.

We studied that university's research. It indicated to us how a shoe should be made to meet the comfort needs of the walking, active foot...rather than the foot at rest. We built such a shoe. The Guide Step shoe.

Inside, it's designed to reduce the back-and-forth heel rubbing (it's cupped at the heel, not level like ordinary shoes).

It's designed to provide more toe room by reducing that bunch-together tendency (it's nice and flat under the toes—bulges upward a bit, actually—doesn't sag like other shoes).

And Guide Steps are designed to help induce the distribution of a person's weight proportionately over the ball of the foot, for greater walking comfort (instead of the usually flattish instep, they have a designed contour that rises toward the inside...which lifts the foot...there).

Try Guide Steps at stores listed. $12.95 to $22.95. Guide Step...the shoes for people who walk.

MASTERS GOLF

[SPECIAL] Top pros tee off for the final round of the four-day Masters Golf Tournament, telecast from Augusta (Ga.) National Country Club. Among the pros shooting for $130,000 in prize money are Jack Nicklaus, 1965 Doral and Pensacola champ Doug Sanders, Billy Casper Jr., Ken Venturi, Julius Boros and Tony Lema.

Defending champ Arnold Palmer, four-time Masters winner, tries again to capture the crown for an unprecedented consecutive win. Other Masters champs who began competition Thursday are Jimmy Demaret, Doug Ford, Ben Hogan, Sam Snead, Art Wall Jr. and Gene Sarazen.

The par-72, 6980-yard Augusta course is laid out on gently rolling terrain, dotted with dogwood and red-bud trees. Spring winds and lush growth make it a test of accuracy. Almost every green requires careful analysis before playing tricky slopes that deflect shots from seemingly straight lines.

1 In a June day in 1807, the American ship Chesapeake refuses to deliver three seamen to the English boarding party claiming them. The English ship Leopard opens fire, killing three, wounding many and then seizing several sailors. It is another instance of violation of U.S. rights at sea by the British, who have been impressing seamen needed in their war against France.

Sen. John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts is outraged by the incident—and is surprised when fellow members of the Federalist Party are reluctant to join him in drafting a protest.

HOMOSEXUAL:

A DOCUMENTARY ABOUT ONE OF TODAY'S MOST SIGNIFICANT SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

In a special television report designed for adult viewing, KRON-TV explores the world of homosexuality. A Channel 4 crew has spent several months documenting male and female homosexual viewpoints. Although hidden cameras were used, "Homosexual" was never meant to be and is not sensational or an exposé. It is Channel 4's desire, in the public interest, to shed light on a complex subject. "Homosexual" is not recommended viewing for children and adolescents.

These are the Great Books

The most worthwhile writings of the last 3,000 years . . . complete with SYNTOPICON, the master key that makes them easier to read and understand!

The books you see here hold infinite riches for you and your family . . . an inexhaustible supply of wisdom and entertainment. These are the truly great books, the really important and timeless writings of our civilization. Fascinating to readers of every age. Banned and burned by tyrants and dictators. Stimulating to every mind in search of ideas.

Complete and unexpurgated, these books have now been organized into a handsome Private Library Edition for your home; to fill gaps in your education; to provide you and your family with knowledge of great literature and ideas; to give you a clearer understanding of history and world events.

More accessible than ever. All these advantages are possible today because of a revolutionary invention — the SYNTOPICON. It “opens up” the GREAT BOOKS to you in a totally new way — makes them more readable and understandable than ever before.

Just like a teacher. The SYNTOPICON is a two-volume directory of ideas, indexed to the GREAT BOOKS. It takes you instantly to the thinking of great authors on specific subjects. Allows you to read in the books without necessarily reading through them. Provides the guidance of a great “teacher” right in your home. Conceived by the noted educator, Dr. Mortimer J. Adler, and developed over a period of eight years, the SYNTOPICON is a unique tool of self-education that helps you apply the world of great ideas to your own life and work.

and this is your key to them

'FDR REMEMBERED'

SPECIAL To commemorate the 20th anniversary of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's death, this documentary focuses on the personal side of FDR's life. CBS news correspondent Charles Kuralt interviews Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. at the family home in Hyde Park, N.Y. At Warm Springs, Ga., where FDR sought relief from the effects of polio, Kuralt visits people who met him there.

While touring the family home, Franklin Jr. recalls how the President learned to drive a hand-operated car—and how the King and Queen of England were frightened after he took them for a ride. He also describes FDR's relationship with his children.

In Warm Springs, Mrs. Mabel Irwin, whose husband was chief physician at the resort, remembers FDR's practical jokes. Miss Toinette Bachelder, a member of

THE QUIET 'MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E.'
NEXT WEEK IN TV GUIDE

HE CAN'T RESIST THE OPEN ROAD

Robert Coote of 'The Rogues' refuses to stay put;
he even walked out of 'My Fair Lady'

The late Bert Coote was an English comedian who for 20 years on both sides of the Atlantic did a sketch called "The Lamb on Wall Street." As an unwary Englishman whose attire included a monocle, a cane and a bowler, Coote posed as an easy mark in a securities swindle—and wound up fleecing the swindler.

succession in the House of Coote has had a worthy following. Robert, the son of Bert, can fake you out of your bank notes in less time than it takes to say Willie Sutton.

Each Sunday night in NBC's The Rogues, he and his confederates—the several members of the Fleming and St. Clair families—perform such imposing acts of larceny that Timmy St. Clair (Coote) is able to state proudly: “The Flemings and the St. Clairs are to crime what the Rothschilds are to banking and the Walendas to the high wire.”

An engaging feature of this shifty group is its abhorrence of violence. In fact, when Scotland Yard, the Sûreté Générale or the FBI come upon a case involving a corpse, they automatically rule out as suspects the Flemings and St. Clairs.

Such a compliment befits Coote, who is a gentle, retiring bachelor of 56 who has spent 40 years as a theatrical vagabond. He has pursued his trade on all the continents, never anchoring himself in one place for more than 21 months—the stretch he did as King Pellinore in “Camelot.”

And even today he lives out of a suitcase in a modest apartment he rents in Beverly Hills, a short drive from his working grounds at Four Star Television, which produces The Rogues. Signed to a four-year contract, Bob admits readily that the prospect of such longevity on a job is frightening.

“Then why did you commit yourself?” he was asked.

“Truthfully,” he responded, “I never figured it would go that long.”

He was right. The Rogues will not be back next fall. But if it had lasted four seasons, chances are Coote would not have been around for the finish. He did, after all, walk out on “My Fair Lady” after 16 months on Broadway. He played Colonel Pickering.

“I got bored,” he says. “I wanted to knock about a bit.” He fled to the French Riviera, where he reclined in the sunshine for three months.

Born in London Feb. 4, 1909, Coote is a moon-faced 6-footer who dropped out of school at 16 to join a stock company which did one-night stands about the British Isles. In his first part, for $12 a week, he portrayed a 70-year-old valet. He has remained in the entertainment field ever since, playing a wide variety of roles on the stage, in motion pictures, in radio and in television.

“I have had only two losing years in this business,” says Coote, with pardonable pride. “And I blame those on Orson Welles. In 1949 I joined his company, which was making a movie of ‘Othello.’ We started out to do the thing in Mogador, French Morocco. In order, we wound up in Casablanca, Rome, Venice, Rome a second time and back to Mogador, where we received our salary in Moroccan dollars. He may as well have paid us off in camels. All the while, I was drawing by mail on my account in a U.S. bank.

“I wasted a year on that project, which put me out of circulation so long that I could find no work whatever the following year. It's the only time I can recall being desperate.”

When Tom McDermott, president of Four Star, decided to enlist Coote as one of the genteel crooks in The Rogues, Bob was encamped in Budapest, making a movie and enjoying gypsy violins nightly in dark little cafés.

"I had known Coote for 20 years and was familiar with his work," says McDermott. "I sent him a cable. He didn't answer. I had to send him four cables before I got a reply. He took the part only because he liked the script I sent. It was scarcely a case of his begging for employment."

Beginning as a secondary character in the series, whose principal performers are Charles Boyer, David Niven and Gig Young, Coote has consistently stolen scenes from all of them. Says producer Collier Young, "The guy's versatility is flabbergasting everyone."

Coote changes faces often in the course of an hour show. In one episode, he played an ancient bird watcher, a Dutch authority on extrasensory perception, a ghost charged with haunting an English castle and a French motorist.

On other occasions, he has appeared as a zoo-keeper who has misplaced the only captive rattlesnake in Kenya, a crazed Australian prospector who has stumbled in from the bush, a British barrister, a Swiss diplomat, a German missile scientist, a Hungarian commissar, a doddering doctor, a society butler and an Interpol detective who wears an eye patch. One time he even played an old woman painter.

Like others who come into contact off-stage with Coote, producer Young admits that he never has gotten to know the actor. "He's a very quiet, almost shy man who doesn't have the comedian's compulsion to be funny off the set," says Young. "Between scenes he usually sits by himself in the sun, reading a London newspaper which he gets each day by air."

"We never know where Bob has his lunch," says Ivan Goff, one of the creators of The Rogues. "He doesn't join us. All we know is continued

For intimate marriage problems tiny Norforms assures easier protection than internal bathing

Guards against germs and odors—effective for hours

Tiny Norforms® is the modern feminine suppository that makes douching old-fashioned and unnecessary. Internal bathing cannot give you the convenience—plus the germicidal and deodorant protection—of Norforms.

Each Norforms is tiny as your fingertip. Yet it's amazingly effective. Forms a powerful antiseptic film that protects tissues. And this protection lasts for hours.

Doctors have found Norforms' deodorant protection outstandingly effective. Proved safe, too—won't irritate.

No Measuring, No Mixing, No Apparatus

Unlike awkward internal bathing—dainty Norforms is the easiest method of protection. Simply insert and feel fresh, feminine, secure. Norforms is at your drug counter now.

that he cares greatly about his work. He never shows up without having given considerable thought to the scenes he is doing that day."

Says another studio official, "Bob's a loner whom we all like and invite to cocktail parties and dinners, but he rarely shows."

Coote's apartment in Beverly Hills doesn't even have a bedroom. A suitcase reposing on a chair could give a visitor who didn't know the occupant the impression that here was a man prepared on quick notice to depart by way of the fire escape. He cooks his own dinners in the small kitchen, usually nipping at a Scotch and soda. After dinner, he paces, script in hand, reading aloud his next day's lines.

"I'm afraid I'm overheard by other tenants who don't know what I do for a living," he says. "They humor me, as people would one a bit touched. I guess you can't blame them when, for example, they hear me as Wolfgang Von Orb, the famous German scientist, and a moment later as Cummings, the hard-of-hearing English butler."

Not long ago Coote purchased a small sports roadster in which he spins to the beach when his working schedule allows. There he takes methodical two-hour walks by himself along the sand, covering a total of 8 miles. "At my pace," he says, "I do exactly 4 miles an hour."

"Why the solitary walks?" he was asked.

He answered simply, "I like to keep fit."

Almost every weekend he leaves the city, driving by himself to such stations of luxury as Palm Springs, Santa Barbara, Laguna Beach and La Jolla. He stretches in the sun and returns home on Sunday night.

Asked candidly if he were as reticent and as lonely as people have painted him, Coote laughed. "On a previous visit to Hollywood," he explained, "I shared a house at the beach with David Niven. He called it 'Cirrhosis by the Sea.' It was a bachelor's paradise where people like Errol Flynn, Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Cary Grant and Randolph Scott dropped in. I dare say a few ladies did, too.

"But those were the days in which we took four to six months to make a picture. In television we make one every week. This monastic existence of mine today is forced upon me by my work. When I am in London with my pals, my life isn't regimented like this. One night it's the pub, another night the dog races, another night out with the girls. And in the daytime it's golf, or the cricket matches, or the horse races. In California I get the feeling I'm being held captive."

Suitcase at the ready

Possibly for this reason, Coote keeps his suitcase ready. Could a man like this ever be tied down to a TV series for a long period of time? A disparity of opinion exists among the executives of The Rogues.

Collier Young, for instance, says yes. "There's a little thing that I call 'breakfast-tray money' that must appeal to him," says Young. "This is the loot that comes in the mail and is dumped on the breakfast tray by the maid. Known officially as residuals, this would, I feel, keep Bob fastened to a series."

Tom McDermott doesn't have Young's confidence. "Coote is a wanderer," says McDermott. "Money alone will never hold him if he gets restless."

Bob never has owned a home, nor has he ever signed a lease for more than three months at a time. He doesn't collect mementos, has no worldly possessions of note.

"I guess you might call me an itinerant actor," he says. "But I'll let you in on a secret. I enjoy the way I live much more than most blokes suspect."

The mode is leather

(THEY SAY IT'S GREAT FOR WHIZZING AROUND TOWN)

*Leather has never played a more important part in the fashion news than for spring '65. The clothes of Guenter, the young designer for Leathermode, to our way of thinking are just right for the ziggy young career girl who whizzes around town on a motorcycle. Our ziggy girl is television and movie actress Barbara Barrie. Opposite: Barbara wears Leathermode's pale blue two-piece pants suit. The short, boxy jacket and slim pants are of softest leather and there's more fashion news in those industrial-size zippers. The outfit is $85. The low white leather boots are by Capezio. Above: One-piece jump suit with matching helmet—both in taupe suede. Again that zippered front, attached belt buckles with leather. Complete—$110. continued

Leather/continued Above: A favorite with the fashion editors is this white suede dress à la Courrèges (the designer who is the rave of Paris). Tiny sleeves, two slash pockets at the waist and just pure simplicity. Dress to be worn above the knee and with soft white leather boots. The Courrèges-style boots are by Golo. Dress is $70. Center: Another pants suit in a smoky blue suede. The safari-style jacket buttons and buckles in blue leather, has flap pockets; narrow pants. Outfit $90. Worn with low blue mock-lizard boots by Capezio.

Right: No, this is not for motorcycle trips, but just try greeting your husband after his long day at the office in this! The slim, slinky skirt is cobra in shades of brown and yellow. Topped with a cream-colored raw-silk shirt with leather buttons and cuff links. Barbara wears shoes in a mock-tortoise patent leather by Capezio. Skirt and shirt $110. All the silk scarves in wonderful prints are by Doro. The short knit-and-leather sports gloves are by Kislav. Barbara's makeup by Eddie Senz. The motorcycle is by Honda of New York.

FOXY GRAMPA IN A BUSINESS SUIT

*Surprisingly, Walter Brennan really wasn't born an old man—
he's just been playing the part for 40 years*

BY MARIAN DERN

From Heidi's gruff old grandfather on the Alp, to Lionel Barrymore's rugged-but-kindly Dr. Gillespie, the tough-but-oh-so-gentle grandfatherish image has been an everlasting favorite. No actor today fills that image better than Walter Brennan.

For those who were saddened when Grampa McCoy, of The Real McCoys, went off the air after six years, this season all was well again. Crotchety old, lovable old, independent old Grampa came back—in new guise. The attire is different (he wears a neatly fitting business suit), the language has changed (he speaks a respectable King's English), but Walter Andrews, chairman of the Thunder Corporation, and starring role of The Tycoon, is foxy old Grampa all over again.

Networks excel at framing images, and the ABC publicists describe Andrews this way: "A temperamental tyrant at times . . . one of the last of the rugged individualists whose talent for engineering profitable business deals and making fortunes is exceeded only by a heart that never loses sight of human values (though the intrinsic kindness in his nature is artfully masked by a gruff exterior)."

Instead of clashing head-on with the fancy "modren" ideas of the younger McCoy clan, this time Brennan battles the unimaginative, stodgy, superautomated, overly efficient corporate mind—all, of course, in the interest of the company welfare. He strikes a blow for rugged individualism every time, battling such dragons as a supposedly "foolproof" radar security system, or the security-minded young executive who thinks only of retirement benefits.

The Tycoon is dedicated to the Horatio Alger thesis that a young man can make a million, if he has "what it takes." One Hollywood wag suggested that the show should be retitled, "The Tycoon or Please, Board Members, I'd Rather Do It Myself."

The combination of gruff-but-kindly-old-man and the American do-it-yourself spirit is about as unbeatable as Mother and the Flag. And if critics say that the corn needs more than a grain of salt to go down, well, Brennan is just the one to make it palatable.

It has been jokingly suggested that Brennan was born an old man, for he has played old men ever since his early thirties. The truth, of course, is that he was born a baby, some 70 years ago in Massachusetts. He made the rounds of Hollywood's casting offices in the early 1920's, along with a cowboy named Gary Cooper, and he is fond of recalling his years as a film extra falling off horses. He even had his teeth knocked out, which only added to his conviction that he was not a handsome-leading-man type, but could do well in character roles.

Though he was always billed in next largest letters, under the stars, there were many leading men who learned, to their great sorrow, that when Brennan was on-screen, a mere flick of his eyebrow could steal a scene right out from under their grandly profiled noses. Brennan's skill was well recognized by Hollywood, which made him the only three-time winner of an Oscar for acting.

Once in a while Brennan has played a villain, most recently in the movie "How the West Was Won." But, said the actor recently, "There were complaints from the public. People didn't want to see me as a bad man."

A charming old codger

There's no question that people know Brennan as a charming old codger, and want him that way. His reputation now, built over some 40 years, is such that Kathy Nolan, who languished away for five years being upstaged by Walter Brennan, summed it up this way: "Talking about Mr. Brennan [she always calls him Mr. Brennan] is like talking about the Statue of Liberty. I mean, what can you say about an institution?"

Only a sourpuss would detect a slight edge to Miss Nolan's comment. And only a cynic would feel impelled to say, "Yeah, a swell guy on-screen, but I'll bet he beats his wife."

The fact is that Brennan off-screen appears a great deal like Brennan on. He himself commented recently: "Some of my friends say that the Tycoon is remarkably like myself, much more so than McCoy."

And so it seems. Brennan is a tall, spritely, white-haired man who dresses surprisingly nattily, and speaks with a Massachusetts accent. He is an individualist all right, too. From the moment he allowed himself to be "hoodwinked" into doing TV, he grumbled repeatedly about the trials of arising at 5 A.M. and working himself week after week, at such an advanced age. When he is pressed, of course, Brennan's eyes twinkle and he admits the reason it took two years to talk him into doing The Real McCoys was that he'd already done a pilot and it hadn't sold. He was simply wary.

The reason The Real McCoys folded, he says, is that "the two kids [Little Luke and Tassy] on the show grew up." However, the fact that Kathy Nolan's Kate was gone and the show transferred to a Sunday time slot opposite Bonanza, with resulting skidding ratings, also had something to do with it. Nevertheless, when The Tycoon came along, Brennan snapped at it, for to him, to keep young is to keep right on working.

"I've never had any hobbies. Golf never appealed to me," snorts Brennan, who is a long-time member of the posh Lakeside Golf Club of Hollywood. "To me, acting is my hobby, my fun. When Monday rolls around, I tell Mrs. Brennan, 'I'm glad it's Monday—off to play at acting.'"

If "no golf" is his recreational credo, "no government" could be his political one. "I never pretended I didn't struggle hard for what I got," he says, referring to some actors who don't like to talk about their salad days. And what he got was, to put it mildly, a bonanza. On the basis of his movie earnings (much of it accumulated when income taxes were low) and TV fees (he owned a piece of The McCoys, which was sold to CBS and is now in reruns, and has "a good share" of The Tycoon), Brennan is rated a multimillionaire.

"He may talk like a simple country boy, but you don't get to own half of Oregon by being simple," said a friend. Brennan owns an 18,000-acre ranch in eastern Oregon, another smaller one there, and extensive acreage in Ventura County (Cal.).

Like the character he plays, Brennan has a disarming sense of humor. "When I was young, I could see a lot of humor in old people. Now that I don't need makeup to play the part, I don't think it's so funny." He often kids that "I make terrible copy—been married to the same woman for 45 years and have 14 grandchildren."

Asked about his secrets of acting, sly old Grampa McCoy hits 'em with his all-time favorite cliché: "Don't know much about acting. If young actors ask for advice I tell 'em—go ahead and learn how to act, but don't get caught at it." Brennan expresses mild surprise if accused of being a fetish out of repeating how grateful he is for all that has happened.

Though everyone involved with The Real McCoys insisted it was just like one big happy family, Brennan clearly stole the show from Kathy Nolan and Dick Crenna, who were rather important too. And though it was often proclaimed that Old Master Brennan took the young actors under his wing to teach them the tricks of the trade, the truth is that, as one observer put it, "To Walter, acting is pure and simple competition." And while both Crenna and Miss Nolan may have learned more watching Brennan than might have been gained from years with a Method school, as Miss Nolan delicately phrases it: "If you work with an institution, you can't be intimidated by it."

One-man acting school

And Miss Nolan is not one to be intimidated. She maintains to this day that while she and the others "learned a lot from Mr. Brennan, he also learned from us." She created a real stir when she left the show after five seasons. "Time to move on," was the way she put it, but it was known that Brennan and others were upset at her seeming disloyalty. There was also some friction when Brennan, in his rugged individualistic way, sought to propound his own political philosophy to one and all. "You could protest," said one person who observed it, "but it would only make for unpleasantness that would take time to patch up."

Yet, after all, all rugged individualists have eccentricities. They may even have a worry or two. With a rare wistful tone Brennan recently discussed the records he has made, several with a patriotic theme. "They didn't sell very well, y'know. I did them in my real voice. When I made some in the Grampa McCoy accent, they sold better," he adds.

And now he has to face the unhappy fact that he won't be working in a TV series next season. His show has not been renewed. The corporate minds that control the destinies of ABC's shows have studied the ratings and decided to retire The Tycoon.

Answer to last week's puzzle

TV TELETYPE : HOLLYWOOD: WALT ANDERSON REPORTS:

Continued

Ben Casey producers have been quietly searching for a new regular to add to the cast, and young JAMES McMULLEN got the job. He will come in as a young researcher at the beginning of next season and may become a major figure around the hospital. Another development: The show's new semiserialized format will take the shape of continuing subplots woven through several episodes, as in this season's five-parter with STELLA STEVENS.

No Time for Sergeants, usually talked about as a sure thing to be renewed for next season, got the word at the last possible minute that ABC had decided it had no time for Sergeants on the revised fall schedule . . . CBS, on the other hand, had a change of heart about the low-rated but critically successful Slattery's People, and Slattery will be back . . . Social note: The Farmer's Daughter (INGER STEVENS) gets engaged to her congressman (WILLIAM WINDOM) on the program of May 7, but they won't be married until next season.

Two of NBC's new fall series get tryouts this month as episodes of other series. Run for Your Life, starring BEN GAZZARA as a young man who has 18 months to live, airs this Thursday (April 15) as a Kraft Suspense Theatre segment, "Rapture at Two-Forty." And The Streets of Laredo, with NEVILLE BRAND, PETER BROWN and WILLIAM SMITH as a trio of Texas Rangers, will be seen as a Virginian episode called "We've Lost a Train."

JOHN DREW BARRYMORE, who has already been a guest in one Gunsmoke this season, comes back for a second as head of a gang of outlaws who take over Dodge City and try to do in Old Matt. It is titled "Seven Hours to Dawn" . . . Soprano MARNI NIXON, heard but not seen as the singing voice of NATALIE WOOD in "West Side Story" and AUDREY HEPBURN in "My Fair Lady," will be heard in an upcoming Bonanza episode dubbing an aria for VIVECA LINDFORS.

Producer QUINN MARTIN, whose new series, The FBI Story, was sold without pilot film or actors, is now selecting his cast. First regular signed: EFREM ZIMBALIST JR., as an agent. Two other major roles--an older man and a girl--are still open . . . The new NBC comedy series, Camp Runamuck, has some of TV's most ornate titles. One segment, for example, is titled "General Directive No. 14: All Personnel Will Turn Out at 8 A.M. Tomorrow Morning to Scale Mount Everest. Bring Your Hammers, Saws and Plenty of Nails and Let's Make This One the Biggest One Yet, Fellas! (Signed) Conrad Hilton."
